General Walter B. Smith, USA
Director, Central Intelligence Central Intelligence Agency
Washington 25, D. C.

My dear General Smith:

I just recently found out that a niece of mine, has taken a Civil Service examination for a possible position with your Agency.

Knowing the nature of your work, and its relationship for our national security, the acquisition and selection of personnel suitable for this type of work is of deep concern to you in effectively carrying out your mission.

She has always been an outstanding student in her academic efforts and will graduate from Wellesley College (Mass.) this June with one of her majors in political science. She possesses native leadership abilities in social, college and athletic endeavors. She is an excellent organizer, possesses an unimpeachable regard for our national institutions and all things that are close to the hearts of true Americans. Her family background comes from a good American heritage found in the states of Virginia, Tennessee and Texas. I am certain in my own mind, should she qualify for the position that she desires with your Agency, you will find her a highly capable, dependable and reliable individual whose character and sense of loyalty and duty is above reproach in every respect. I am sure she will make good if given the opportunity.

I have taken this opportunity to write as I have, not only that I am interested in her behalf in getting a good start in the new world that faces her upon graduation, but I also have a deep concern in all matters that pertain to our government and in particular, the position that is yours. It was this feeling that motivated me in writing this letter.
